CAIRO (AP) — U.S. State Secretary Cyrus Vance ar-rived in Cairo today, the sec-ond stop of his 'Middle East tour, and praised Egyptian President Anwar Sadat as a man of vision, a statesman

Vance said in an arrival statement that he had "useful and helpful" talks in Israel, his first stop. He said that the United States is doing "every-thing we can to find a settle-ment in the Middle East."
"We in the United States have great respect and admi-

Vance was to meet with Sadat tonight.

He told reporters earlier that during his stop in Jerusalem he found "flexibility" among Israel's leaders and "that was encouracing." that was encouraging."

The Banks' Whining Litany

When Canadian chartered banks spoiled brats a touch of the lash. recanted, claiming it was misunderstood, the sentiments still stand.

Last Thursday, banks warned they would lower interest rates on savings accounts if Ottawa required interest to be credited to accounts monthly, rather than twice a year which is the current practice. Another proposed amendment to consumer credit legislation would make banks consider the daily balance rather than the minimum monthly balance in an account when computing interest. The federal consumer affairs department says the current system , 'gives the deposit takers literally millions of dollars of interest-free money to work

As Stanley Knowles (NDP-Winnipeg North Centre) suggested in the House of Commons on Monday, the country's 12 chartered banks are issuing statements amounting to threats and collusion. Canada's mollycoddled chartered banks have been insulated from the real world until very recently by successive governments that controlled competition and allowed the banks to flourish despite the economic weather. In the recent period of stagflation it was the banks that listed record profits.

No matter that the child has partially While profits may have declined somewhat during 1976 as inflation abated and interest rates dropped, the banks have done very well.

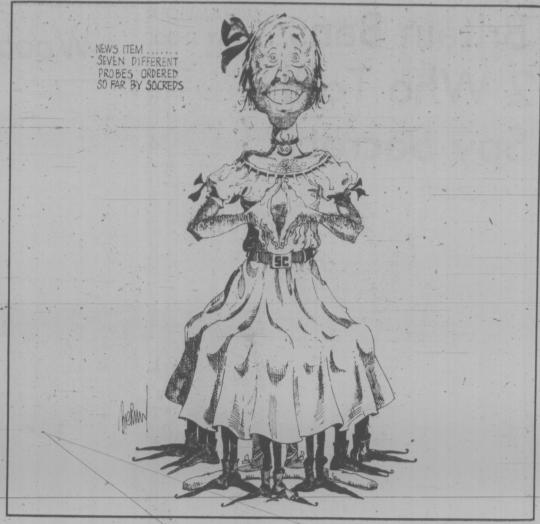

> Total assets of Canada's chartered banks are well over $100 billion today. Yet this cartel of finance that has benefitted more than any other group of institutions from Canadian development has the temerity to say that enormous costs resulting from the government initatives will necessarily'be passed on to consumers. According to the Canadian Bankers' Association it is simple to credit interest to accounts in branches with computers but only 60 per cent of all bank savings accounts will be computerized this year, rising to about 86 per cent in the next five years. Meanwhile, without computerization, the banks claim it would be terribly costly to compute interest on a monthly or daily basis.

Balderdash: Such legislation would simply speed up bank computerization. Considering the profits they have fair question to ask why the banks haven't proceeded with computerization sooner. Listening to this whining litany from banks, Canadians get the impression that their financial institu- spoiled the child can wield the rod.

powerful cartel can dictate to the government. After decades in which government thinking was often analogous to that of the banks - people in government are often directors of the most powerful banks - Ottawa will have a difficult time reversing field. In the wake of the bankers' threats Consumer Affairs Minister Anthony Abbott said officials are studying how many times a year interest might have to be paid. It could be a quarterly basis. Is the government backing down already? Will Salter Hayden and the shellbacks of the Senate who boast scores of bank directorships have their way? Like a serialized soap opera, past performances tell us that compromise will be made. Yet when the government of Canada is challenged by a cozy cabal of its own creation it should act decisively. Canadian banks deserve to make a profit, like any enterprise. Case Dismissed

Being a witness in a recent court case. I was shocked at the result. A woman was on trial for assaulting the wife of the man she lived with. It was a vicious assault, causing permanent injury. There was no provocation. Instead of retaliating, the wife called the police.

The trial was a mockery of justice at its. worst: The wife was placed on the stand and given the third degree as if she was the villain. All their marital troubles were brought into the case.

The husband was not at home, when the particular, do not know the meaning of assault took place, nevertheless, he was allowed to take the stand, and produce some old documents, irrelevant to the

The wife has supported him since 18 years; he has never worked. It was obscene, to say the least, to see the mistress with her present partner being supported by the former one.

The case was dismissed against the mistress. In other words, she was given sanction to repeat her action. That night she called the wife on the phone and laughed at her. Do we live in a jungle? Very soon, there won't be a place for respectable people to hide. — B. Hewett, R.N., 420 Catherine Street.

Executive Blues

So Art Casson (Feb. 13) believes that executives and broom-pushers should be paid equal wages. If that ever happens then wives of executives would expect equality of lifestyle.

They would demand full-time husbands who did not have to attend meetings or out of town conferences, no bulging briefcases carried home, a nine-to-five routine with husband home every night and all weekend to help bring up the children, deal with household emergencies, balky car, PTA meetings, etc., husband's mind not to be overburdened with matters pertaining to the office so that when at home his ears function and a portion of his mind is free to devote to family affairs.

Either accede to these demands or make the broom-pusher assume his fair share of the work load. If this is not practicable and you still feel that the executive s not worth the extra money, just make out a cheque for the extra and send it to the executive's wife, who needs some - Ruby Pearson, 2085 Avondale

Wilderness Church

Listening to the minister of forests discuss plans to log off the few undisturbed places left in southern B.C., it becomes uickly obvious that he thinks only in exploitative terms. He states that logging in 'recreation," by which he means hunting, skidooing etc. He fails to consider the nonexploitative and most vital value of a truly undisturbed area, especially for those of us who do not define recreation as power-tripping diversion. Not everyone goes into wilderness to play with their toys. Many of us go because wholeness is the greatest beauty, and because we urgently need to spend some time with the environment that created us so that we may know what is real in this world that we have torn to pieces and which, in turn, is tearing us to pieces. Only in a whole environme we able to integrate body, mind and spirit. to be fully alive and thus know the meaning of existence.

Forests Minister Tom Waterland apparently doesn't worry about our quality of life being reduced to the level we see south of the border. As it is, our children are more and more dissatisfied with what we have done to their world. Virtually all of our living places have been carved up. There is hardly a mountainside to be found that is not scarred with roads, power lines and slash. The ecological wounds are far more serious than immediately apparent.

For myself, my children and generations to come, a true wilderness is church sity and more. What is good and meaningfu for any or all of us must not be decided by those whose priorities centre around in-dustrial economics.—Tom Anderson, Okanagan Falls, B.C.

Grossly Unjust

Surely the Social Credit government

such words as compassion and justice. First we learn that the government is holding back money (about $22 per month per person) that was given to the provincial government by the federal government to add to the income of the handicapped. Now we learn in your front page story (Feb. 12, Gov't Grabs a Fortune) that the human resources department intends to take away $300 from a handicapped person which rightfully belongs to him.

Bill Vander Zalm proudly boasts of saving $80 million in one year on the human resources budget. Unfortunately much of this saving comes out of the very thin budgets of the poor and the handicapped and the budgets of the programs designed to help them What is so grossly unjust about this is that, while the Social Credit government is taking money away from the poor and the handicapped, it is handing money out in large gobs to the very wealthy - $25 million in cancellation of succession duties and gift taxes to the millionaires, $25 million in reduced royalties and incentive grants to the rich mining corporations.

Surely the human resources department should, above all, be attempting to nourish the growth of the human resources of this province. Instead, by its pennypinching policies, by the lack of con-cern, compassion, fairness, and justice, in its treatment of the poor and handicapped. it is throttling the growth of the human spirit, and turning B.C., which should be a place of joy and beauty, into a place of misery, insecurity and fear for many who through no fault of their own are living in poverty.—J. Philip Fawcett, 57 Wellington Street.

The title you (or the Washington Post) gave to Edward Devol's article (Feminism and the "He-She" Dilemma in English) about the anti-feminist features of the English language contains one solution to the problem, namely "he-she."

Surely present-day acceptable usage contains much that was originally English as she is spoke (writ)!" And here is no need for a committee of pedants to make a lengthy study of our gender origins. If those interested set a trend by using "he-she" and "his-her." plus substituting "human," "humans" and 'humanity' for 'man' and 'men, language would evolve gradually and painlessly. Premier Impresses East

OTTAWA - Premier Bill Bennett of British Columbia seems to be emerging as the main provincial figure embarked on a practical effort to strengthen the Canadian Federal officials and politicians made much of him when he was here in Ottawa for three days last week, scenting an ally in the effort to prevent this country from being split apart. Bennett was sufficiently in demand that when a west coast jour nalst gave a party for him, a British Columbia politician who had accidentally been left off the guest list came anyway.

I heard you were giving a party for Bill Bennett, he said disarmingly when he arrived. "Do you mind if I crash it?" The fact that Bennett wanted something expensive during his visit did not reduce the warmth of his welcome -nor should it. The thing Bennett wants at the moment is well within all the traditions of Canadian federalism. He wants the central government to help provide the infrastructure of roads and other facilities deposits of metallurgical coal. They are in the northeastern part of the province, impossible to ship out at present

By providing the assistance he is after Mr. Bennett argues, the federal govern-ment would be establishing a valuable presence for itself in a province that for a quarter century has seemed even more distant from Ottawa in thought and emotion than in miles. He argues, too, that once the coal could be shipped there is a good enough market for it that it alone might cut $1 billion a year from Canada's severe balance of payments deficit.

Bennett Welcomed

Whether that figure is realistic at the moment is not the point. The important thing is that a province that has felt little community of interest with Ottawa finds that it is, after all, the central government that can assist in great projects and is proposing a new partnership. That is why

Bennett is so welcome here these days The reasons for his welcome go beyond this one project that is dear to his heart. He is not yet a regional leader or spokesman but it is obvious that he may develop into one. He has told friends that he believes Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta is the natural man for this role because of his personal appeal and standing. Bennett, however, has also spoken of his disappointment that the Alberta leader shows no sign of being willing to fill that spot. Lougheed's preoccupation with Alberta's affairs, especially to ensure that there is some secondary industry in place before oil supplies run out, has made his single minded.

Premier Allan Blakeney's friends and critics alike agree on his brilliance and some, indeed, think him the most able of the provincial premiers. He is, however very doctrinaire and he comes across not as a regional spokesman for federation but as a politician deeply convinced that Ottawa is the enemy. He may not actually believe that but it is the impression he leaves. His fellow NDP premier, Ed Schrevder of Manitoba, is thoughtful and well-liked by politicians here but he does not seem to be the man likely to revitalize the Canadian federation. Bennett's approach is based on the role that the natural Canadian regions play, or could play in our affairs. To him, they are the units to be linked into an effective

"To a very basic degree we've proposed more opportunity for the regions to deal, or provincial governments if you will, to deal with specific programs in those areas, programs that cannot be developed or carried out under a rigid federal system," he recently told a televi-

Rigid federal programs are the sort of instrument that creates dissatisfaction and yet we also see a stronger role from the federal government, at least in my view, of an income support dealing directly with Canadians as a whole and not funnelling the money through the provincial

'I feel the federal government has very les it can continue to carry out. Canada has a strong place in the world as a

'Confederation of five regions is the only way you can run a country of just over 20 million people and a country the size of Canada. You can't hope to have the same type of system that runs a few hundred million people as they do in the United States below us. The very size yet smallness of our population demands a more flexible system and that's how you'll keep it together. It won't fly apart. Strong regions or strong provinces will make a

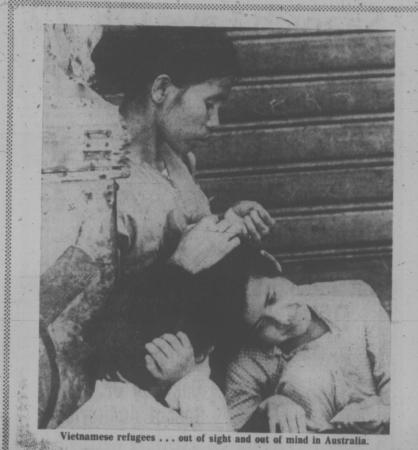

Some of Bennett's ideas are clearly premier under whom British Columbia veered away from Ottawa. This is particularly true of his belief that the country needs an income support scheme of the guaranteed annual income or negative income tax type and that this should involve ple, not with provincial governments. He es it as a major way of strengthening the federal position while still leaving greater flexibility to the regions in other matters. Obviously, it is an idea that would be hotly resisted in Quebec, and not just by a

Counter-productive

It seems to me, though, that in our present difficulties it is not so important we can agree on the specific ideas that various leaders put forward as that they should be offered for discussion and debate. Just standing pat does not seem likely to do it. That is why Ontario Premier Bill Davis' business-as-usual approach is surely inappropriate

Rene Levesque and his party are not to work very hard for their objective, of ously with some chance of success. If they are to be countered, then the Canafederation must show vitality and its leaders an element of creativeness that

It is popular at the moment to talk of further decentralization of the union as the likely answer. To some extent, in some ways, that may be the case. But attention one that Trudeau has made-that there is flexible enough to satisfy a man who is intent on leading his province out of the federation altogether. The other is that, while it would be counter-productive simply to insist on defence of the status quo, we must not decentralize to the point where there are only provinces or regions and no

The Forgotten People

An Article from The Australian, Canberra, reprinted by Atlas World Review

. Australia, helped by several of its politicians, patted itself on the back internationally two 2,000 Vietnamese refugees. Two weeks after the refugees had arrived in an extrava-ganza of emotional media coverage—"Refugees Flee Horror for New Homes in Promised Every Help"—most Australians had forgotten about them

In June, 1975, the Senate set up a Foreign Affairs and Defence Standing Committee inquiry into Vietnamese and other refugees. According to the committee's report, Australia's policy on settling the refugees is nonexistent, and their problems by no means stopped when they arrived. Life for some has been as strange, fearful, and direcboats on which many escaped

One glaring example of the 'out-of-sight-out-of-mind' titude is that no one knows for sure how many Vietnamese refugees are here, where they are now, how many are receiv-ing special benefits and employed or if the jobs are suitable, how many are learning English, how many have equate housing. The com tee report points out that the positive results that have been achieved with the refugees are largely due to the efforts of individuals and charitable organizations rather than any government department.

One "unfortunate mistake" is that the refugees arrived believing they had been given assurances that their educational and professional qualifications would be recognized in Australia, whereas most have not. They also believed they would be given opportunities to retrain, but only seven have been serious attempt to do this.

In Queensland, the community at Gatton successfully organized a scheme for two as seasonal workers. Brisbane company offered another aid project—thirty-six Vietnamese could sharecrop a property with the opportunity eventually to own it. The company would provide housing and plant the first crop but it wanted a continuation of unemployment benefits for a year. The offer was refused. A group of refugees at Wacol migrant camp in Queensland sent the Government a long let ter outlining their difficulties in establishing a new life in a totally different society (one simple request was could they please be allowed to cook Vietnamese food). They received no, answer.

There have been no complaints against the Viet-namese, who are regarded as resilient, resourceful, in-dustrious, intelligent people who probably complain too lit-tle. "We've treated them as migrants, not as refugees," said one official. "There's a vast difference. Migrants have made a conscious, rational they prepare for it, and they can mostly go home if it doesn't work out. Refugees flee to any available

The refugee problem won't, just vanish. There are still 110,000 Vietnamese, Cambodian, and Laotian refugees in squalid camps in Thailand, and another 1,700 in small boats resured the Thai cases who have around the Thai coast who have not been admitted. Neon Sign Tells It All

By FOX BUTTERFIELD New York Times

HONG KONG - At first glance it looks much like any other gas station, the pumps, the modern class office, the uniformed attendants. But the large rotating neon sign above it says, in Chinese characters, National Gas Station. For the customers, there is no need to explain that it sells gasoline from China.

The recently opened station is just one of a rapidly growing number of new investments by China, or by Hong Kong Chinese connected with China, in this British colony.

Over the last year, China has also begun building a large machinery manufacturing plant, oil storage facilities and a ship repair yard, each with outlays of more than $20 million. China's 13 banks in Hong Kong have exled their operations, using the colony as a kind of backyard Switzerland. Real estate companies financed by China have stepped up their purchases of choice office buildings, and Hong Kong's two Communist advertising agencies have increased their budgets to push sales of Chinese goods, ranging from processed foods and medicine to rugs and antiques.

Communist enterprises in the colony currently include the banks, with 120 branches, three large department stores and 90 smaller neighborhood outlets, four insurance companies, travel and shipping agencies, sizable real estate holdings, warehouses, three new-spapers, movie theatres and the two advertising agencies. China also controls about 400 ts and distributors for Chinese goods in Ironically, all this expanded Communist business activity pleases both the British government and Hong Kong's large foreign companies. For it is the best guarantee of Hong Kong's future.

With only 20 more years until the 99-year lease on the New Territories expires in 1997, questions about how long Hong Kong will exist are becoming more and more important to China itself recognizes neither the lease on the New Territories — the only area left for industrial development — nor the treaty that ceded Hong Kong island to Britain in perpetuity. With only a token British defence force left here, Peking could take the colony back with a telephone call, as the saying goes.

But most businessmen remain optimistic.

"It's the old story of the profit motive. If Hong Kong ceased to exist, China would lose all, its money," remarked a British merchant active in promoting Hong Kong. "Their new investment is clearly based on an assessment that Hong Kong will be here for a long time to China, of course, offers no figures on its earnings in Hong Kong, but by some well-informed estimates Peking made about $2.2 billion in the colony last year, enough to cover 40 per cent of its total imports of $5.6 billion. Without Hong Kong, China's trade deficit of $1.5 billion over the last three years would have been far higher.

China's growing financial interest in Hong Kong, however, also raises the spectre of Peking's slowly establishing economic con-

"Hong Kong is getting more and more integrated into the Chinese economy," an American banker said. "The date 1997 doesn't mean anything any more. When the right time comes they won't have to do anything." Or, more sanguine, "They could just let it go on as a free trade zone."

British officials here decline to comment on such sensitive issues.

"My attitude is completely neutral to Chinese investment." a ranking British official said. "It's not a question to which I must apply my mind."

Like others interviewed, he requested anonymity.

But some others wonder whether there has not already been a kind of reversal of roles in Hong Kong, with Hong Kong becoming profitable for China and its own residents, but not for Britain, its overlord. Britain buys more from Hong Kong than it sells to its colony, and in the view of some, its only really important financial asset is Kai Tak Airport, whose traffic rights of $170 million a year cover the unfavorable balance, but only

CHICAGO CHICAGO (AP) — Soybean futures prices pushed upward on the Board of Trade Thurs-day and other farm futures followed that trend. Momentum from Wednesday's price hikes aided the soybean complex as did speculative and commercial buying. Prices were as much as 4% cents a bushel higher.

Corn and oats gained from the soybean increase and prices climbed about one cent for both commodities in moderate trading.

Temperatures in the Midwest were expected to reach into the 30s and 40s today but the weather will remain dry, the National Weather Service said.

Brokers said the poor moisture outlook aided wheat which gained about two cents. Soybean oil and meal bene-fitted from the buying trend and rose.	Ice bi	roilers	were

Ideas Sought To Stop Bullies

Parents wanting tougher measures against school bullies should join forces to demand action from trustees, Greater Victoria school board chairman, Susan Brice said today.

The board welcomes parents' ideas to combat the problem which has been underlined by two recent incidents in which students were badly beaten.

Bullying will never be totally eliminated, she said, but if parents feel it is getting worse because of lack of school discipline, they should make their feelings known.

And 14-year-old David Simpson is still in hospital after another student kicked him so severely two weeks ago it ruptured his appendix and badly bruised his-groin.

Both parents indicated they will attend Monday's school board meeting to discuss the problem of bullying.

Mrs. Brice said that up to this point, bullying had not' been brought to her attention. She said she does not know if bullying is getting more brubullying is getting more bru-tal, or if the two recent cases were isolated incidents.

Any input parents can give on the best way to handle the problem and what direction they think the board should go she said. They might have specific suggestions the board can act on, or it may take the form of a general discussion of problems in the community.

In the past most instances of bullying have been taken care of at the neighborhood level, Mrs. Brice said. The parent of the boy involved in the Oak Bay incident said her son has been "very firmly disciplined" and that he was not a big boy. She said a kids' quarrel should not be blown out of

The principal of the school said that Fraser's earlier allegation that 30 or 40 students go to school every day terrified of the bully was "grossly exaggerated."

Other members of the planning committee reacted differently. They cropped a $50,000 study called "financing the rate and scale of growth," eliminated another proposed assessment of coastal land resources which would have cost $58,000 and drew a bead on a whopping transit study.

The transit study would take almost half the planning department budget and Hammer was fold to return to the next budget session ready to trim it. At the moment $210,000 is earmarked for it.

. Committee members questioned the value of planning reports.

"The test of any study is the use it is put to," director Murray Glazier said. "I haven't seen much from these studies taking hold."

He suggested planning priorities are wrong when half the budget is supposed to go to a transportation study and only $40,000 to administering the regional plan and $11,000 to an economic base survey.

Neff Goes For Fourth

Vancouver's Aubrey Neff, the founding father of the Canadian Firefighters Curling Association, was hoping to make it four B.C. championships when play opened today in the championship round of the 1976 provincial event at Victoria Curling Club.

And he won't have any Victoria rink to worry about.
Sam Anselmo of Warfield took care of that Wednesday.

Neff, who has represented B.C. three times in the nationals, 1962, 1966 and 1972, edged Roy Thorpe of New Westminster, 9-8, Wednesday in the "A" final.

Anselmo defeated two Victoria rinks; Les Brice and extra end for the win foria rinks, Les Brice and Stan Thame, in that order to win the "B" championship and take the final qualifying berth in the final round.

Anselmo was matched against Neff in today's first draw at 7 a.m.

The other playoff semi-final was between Thorpe, the "A" final loser and John Campbell of Vancouver, who defeated Dave Cameron, also of Van-couver, 10-5 in the first game

YOUNG JOCKEY BREAKS

NEW YORK (AP) - Young Steve Cauthen broke another thoroughbred racing record at Aqueduct when he piloted at Aqueduct when he piloted three winners across the finish line Wednesday. The output gave the remarkable 16-year-old apprentice jockey 106 winners in 41 racing days, breaking the mark for a 50-day racing period of 105 winners set by Johnny Longden in 1952.

Cauthen's winners Wednes day were Old Hag, who paid $2.80 in the fourth race; Root Cause, a $4 payoff in the seventh and Gene's Legacy, returning $6 in the ninth and final race of the day.

of the championship round Wednesday. Campbell and Ca-meron were beaten "A" semi-finalists.

Winners were scheduled to meet at 11:30 and if Neff was a loser, the final game was set for 3:30 p.m.

Thame, who had beaten Brice on opening day, got to the "B" final with a last-rock deuce against Bob Partridge of Penticton to win 9-8. But in the final, he could get nothing started. He con-ceded after seven ends to An-selmo, 9-2.

Harper Returns in Bid For Third Mixed Crown

Times Staff

The Island curling play-down program winds down this weekend with the eight-rink mixed final set for the Comox Valley Curling Club at Courtenay beginning Friday Club.

Harper was the B.C. mixed champion in 1966 and also in 1970. Each time he narrowly missed taking the Canadian. He was second in '66 and lost a playoff in 1970. He was also a Brier representative in 1960 and 1963 and had a second in

Illegal Suite Cases Split In Court

RICHMOND (CP) — A provincial court judge dismissed an illegal suite charge against a Richmond couple Tuesday, but later found another guilty of a similar charge. charge.

Judge William Campbell dismissed a charge against Mr. and Mrs. Harjiender Singh Johal on grounds of in-sufficient evidence.

He later found guilty and levied fines of $100 each against Anthony and Doreen Coleman for maintaining ille-gal suites in their single-family dwelling unit in this Van-couver suburb.

In dismissing the charge against the Johal couple, Judge Campbell accepted defence lawyer Harry Rankin's argument that the crown had failed to prove its case.

-Rankin did not dispute that part of the couple's home was being used as a suite, but he argued that there was no evi-dence proving two families were living in the house.

Q. Could you please explain what causes excess fluid to accumulate in the body and tell me what can be done to

A. Sodium is, of course, one of the major elements necessary for maintaining fluid bal-ance in the body. Normally, in temperate climates, the body needs a minimum of about one gram a day to replace the amount it lost. In practice, however, American diets usually contain anywhere from two to 10 grams. While we recognize that higher intakes of sodium over a long period of time may confribute to the development of hypertension, healthy individuals are able to get rid of the excess.

In a number of diseases, the normal ways the body has to excrete sodium and fluid can be disrupted. This can result in a buildup of sodium and fluid in the spaces surrounding the cells, a condition called edema.

but recently I read that baker's yeast in particular could be harmful. Why is this?

A. Yeast contains apprecials and is an especially good source of thiamin. Because of this it has long been used as a nutritional supplement in parts of the world where malnutrition is widespread.

Yeast is also being considered as a potential source of called edema.

The treatment of the particular disease or condition that has caused the edema is one thing. But, generally, diuretios and a sodium—restricted diet are used to help eliminate excess fluid.

Q. Could you please nate excess fluid.

Q. Could you please comment on yeast as a nutrirional supplement? I have been taking tablespoon of yeast in orange juice for some time, wasted. eating a varied diet is probably getting all the B vitamins ny protein he or she needs. In you like to take a dried yeast supplement occasionally it won't do you any harm' or probably any good either. While commercial yeast production may provide inexpensive protein, you'd hardly call the yeast currently sold at the local health food store an inexpensive form. The problem with baker's yeast is that it is generally sold live. In the gastrointestinal tract, live yeasts may consume as much as some tamins as they produce. Obviously, then, live baker's yeast is not a wise choice.

Abby, my husband and I struggled with that problem for years, and we resolved it according to your suggestion. Both sets of parents lived nearby, and it seemed the only fair thing to do. So for 22 years, we spent Thanksgiving and Christmas in parents' homes instead of our own.

It never dawned on us until this year—as our children are ready to strike out on their own—that we never developed our own holiday traditions.

ANSWER:

Nutritious home prepared baby foods can easily be made with a blender, food mill or sieve and spoon. The basic recipe is simply ¼ cup liquid combined with I cup solid food which is then blended on low, forced through a sieve or put through a food mill until SMOOTH. The liquid chosen may be milk formula, unsweetened fruit juice, unsalted broth or unsalted cooking liquid. DON'T use canned vegetable liquid, sugar syrup from canned fruits or sweetened fruit juice. The solid food should be cooked first and then diced or chopped, or use ripe raw banana. Meats are the most difficult food to puree and should be tested for smoothness before being given to a young baby. Fish without bones may be blended with a fork. Government and independent economics forecast nine-percent growth this, year, though some industry sources are much more gloomy. Some of West Germany's biggest exporters such as the motor, chemical and electrical industries, all of which boosted their foreign sales considerably last year, are convinced that this year's rate of increase will be slacker.

There is similar pessimism in the engineering sector, while steel sources said they are chary about making any forecasts.

Last Year Was Worst for Oil Spills

years after the wreck of the Torrey Canyon first showed how a giant oil tanker could ruin a shoreline, the increasing number of tankers plying the seas has caused the problem to grow worse. Something like 60,000 tons of oil gushed out of the stranded Torrey Canyon in 1967 and smothered some of the most prized beaches in Britain and France.

Since then, the giant tankers have multiplied. Senator Warren Magnuson, chairman of a United States Senate committee investigating a re-cent spate of oil spills around U.S. coasts, said last year was the worst in history for oil spill accidents.

The world body which has the task of trying to combat and prevent global oil pollution is the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO), a London-based specialized agency of the United Nations concerned with safety at sea.

The range of IMCO's work is substantial, covering such areas as maritime safety, the safety of fishing vessels, fire prevention, ship design, the transporting of dangerous goods and bulk cargoes, communications at sea, safety of munications at sea, safety of navigation and the prevention of marine pollution.

A major problem of large oil spills is that they can upset the ecological balance of coastal areas.

A report presented to IMCO by the Barbados government said there is evilence that discharged crude oil in the Atjantic is harming the coral reef which forms a protective screen around the island. screen around the island. In order to try to prevent such damale, IMCO adopted a convention in 1972 which pro-vided for the global control of ocean-dumping by oil tankers and the discharge of oil while tanks are being cleaned.

IMCO's work goes as back as the design stage of vessels. Studies on the construction and equipment of oil tankers began in 1968. By 1971, definite requirements for the arrangement of tanks in large oil tankers had been worked cut and were adopted by the IMCO assembly in that

The money is contributed tributor is Liberia, paying gross tonnage of merchant vessels.

Preventive action is largely the province of national gov-ernments said Yoshio Sasa-mura, a member of the IMCO marine pollution.

An anti-pollution centre to operate an early-warning system for major oil spills in the Mediterranean was set up in December in Malta, financed by the United States.

Ships involved in accidents or sighting spillages of oil can radio reports to local radio stations or direct to the

The centre in turn com-municates information to na-tional governments so that an-ti-pollution operations can be organized as quickly as possiprototype for other such centres around the world.

The United Nations Environment Program has taken measures to draw up "action plans" for five other threat-ened areas: the Caribbean, the Gulf, the, Red Sea, the Atlantic off West Africa and the Straits of Malacca.

For many countries, however, IMCO's most important function is as an international forum at which international maritime problems can be discussed and standards continuously kept up-to-date.

Despite the length of time that IMCO conventions take to come into force internationally, many changes are implemented relatively quickly by major maritime nations through changes in their national law and regulations

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

As more or less of a principle, the minimum number of trumps required for a game contract in a suit is eight, and the most favorable distrubition is four in dummy and four in declarer's hand.

But, on occasion, one finds himself playing a game con-tract with four trumps in his own hand and only three in dummy. In these deals, deli-cate handling is usually re-quired. Today's deal serves as an illustration of this theme.

trump — and had East guessed to lead a heart, the defenders would have taken the first five tricks. When North actually raised to two spades, South contracted for game in spades.

After cashing the king and queen of hearts at tricks one and two, West continued with the ace of hearts at trick three. If declarer had ruffed this trick, he would have been defeated. Undoubtedly he next would have cashed three too. would have cashed three top trumps, hoping that the six outstanding trumps were divided 3-3. West would then be-left with the last trump in the deck, which he would use to ruff the second diamond lead, and cash his remaining

Instead of ruffing the third Instead of ruffing the third heart lead, South simply discarded his losing club, conceding the trick to West. It didn't matter what West led next. If he played a fourth heart, duning would ruff with the king of spades. South's own trump-length would now he preserved, with four trump-leads picking up West's leads picking up West's trumps.

A few new leaves opening on bush roses, or the appearance of a flower bud on bushes that have maintained more or less continuous growth, is no cause for alarm, nor would it be wise to attempt any pruning now.

The pruning time for bush roses in this area is from late March to mid-April. North of the Malahat it is from mid-April to approximately the beginning of May.

The exact date always depends on the prevailing weather and the location of the garden in relation to large the garden in relation to large bodies of salt water. Gardens bordering salt water are frostfree earlier in the season than those in low spots further in-

been determined by rose growers with long experience in this coastal climate, and where is sound reasoning behind it.

No matter how mild the weather is now, winter does not end until March 21, and anything can happen in the next five weeks. Another factor is the growth habit of bush roses. New growth always starts from the buds at the top of the cane whenever air temperature is suitable. This, is happening now.

These young growths will not withstand low air temperatures and could be killed before the winter is over.

Loss of these precocious growths is no detriment on a 36 inch cane, the length we the cane will be reduced to 16 inches at pruning time.

If pruning is done now there would be a limited number of growth buds left on each cane. Should these start growth in a mid period and be killed by frost, the next lower set of buds would be stimulated, and could also be lost.

set of buds would be stimulated, and could also be lost.

In a case where the bushes had been low pruned there could soon be no buds left for this season's flowers.

As long as the growths at the top of the canes are developing there will be no action in the lower buds at this time of year. Should the top growths be removed, or killed by trost, the next set of buds by frost, the next set of buds lower on the canes will be stimulated and start growth. By leaving the growths that
